Packaging description	Packaging is a multi-component packaging system designed to protect the product during storage, transport, distribution, and delivery to the end user. The packaging system includes: • paper elements (cardboards, labels and leaflets) with protective, informational and identification functions, • stretch film used to stabilize and secure loads during transport and storage, • document rebates for secure placement of shipping and logistics documents on collective packaging, • adhesive tape used to close, secure and maintain the integrity of packaging, • logistics and courier stickers enabling the identification, tracking and correct handling of shipments in the supply chain, • pallets, used depending on the size of the order, ensuring the stability of the load and enabling safe transport and storage. The entire packaging has been designed to ensure an adequate level of product protection while limiting the amount of materials used to the absolute minimum. The components used enable efficient logistics processes and, depending on the material type, are suitable for reuse, recycling, or recovery in accordance with applicable packaging and packaging waste management requirements. The packaging system fulfills protective, transport, information, and logistical functions, ensuring product quality and safety throughout the entire delivery cycle.
